Low Energy

What is Low Energy?

Sometimes we long to know how to increase energy levels and wonder if we need vitamins and supplements for energy. When you have ample energy, it is easier to feel happy, positive and excited about things. However, low energy makes performing everyday tasks extremely difficult. Work becomes daunting, relationships strained, and participating in the activities that should make you happy isn't possible because of low energy levels.

Since low energy levels seem to be so common in the hectic modern lifestyle, it is too often considered a normal state of being. The truth is, this is not a normal state. Poor diets, excessive toxins and pollutants in the environment, unbalanced lifestyles, lack of exercise, and too much stress are all common factors that may lead to decreased energy levels.

Sometimes, low energy levels are not caused by our lifestyles but are instead a symptom of a medical or psychological condition that must be addressed.

Diagnosing Low Energy

If fatigue or lack of energy has been a problem for a long time, the first step is to take a look at possible lifestyle causes and examine how they can change.

- Am I getting enough regular exercise (at least 30 minutes, three times a week)?
- Am I drinking enough water (approximately 8 glasses per day)?
- Do I drink no more than 3 cups of coffee, tea or soda per day and keep caffeine intake to a minimum?
- Do I keep alcohol intake to a minimum (no more than 1 drink per night/day)?
- Do I eat enough fruit and vegetables (5 portions per day)?
- Do I eat a balanced diet with recommended carbohydrates, proteins, fats and fiber?
- Am I getting enough iron in my diet?
- Do I eat three meals a day and snack on healthy foods when hungry?
- Am I getting enough sleep (the average person needs between 7-8 hours per night)?
- Do I set aside quality rest and relaxation time?
- Do I deal with emotional issues and conflict in a proactive manner?
- Am I managing my stress levels efficiently?

If you answered no to any of these questions, try and rectify those aspects of your lifestyle by making the necessary changes. If your energy improves, you can generally rule out other causes.

Help for Low Energy

If after addressing these issues you still haven't found how to increase energy levels or if you have any other concerning symptoms, it is advisable to make an appointment for a medical assessment. Sometimes fatigue is a symptom of a more serious condition that needs more help than vitamins and supplements for energy. These conditions include hormonal imbalances and depression.

Be sure to always research how to increase energy levels in a healthy and natural way. Natural homeopathic and herbal remedies are often used to give the body a natural push in the right direction for healthy energy. Not only are some of these remedies natural supplements for energy, but they can greatly improve immune system strength, general vitality and overall systemic functioning.

Many vitamins and supplements for energy feature herbs such as Siberian Ginseng, Olea europea (extract of olive leaf) and Centella asiatica which can be taken to safely help fight fatigue and give that extra boost and restore your zest for life!

The Natural Approach

While Western medicine has become the norm in many cultures, it is not the only treatment option. Conventional Western medicine (often called allopathic or orthodox medicine) is the system of medicine taught at most medical schools, and many pharmaceutical and synthetic medicines are manufactured and marketed according to the principles of allopathic medicine.

Because most of us in the Western world have grown up in a society in which allopathic medicine is the prevailing norm, we forget that only a few decades ago, homeopathic, herbal and other natural medicines were commonly available and freely used-- even by conventional doctors. While there are often heated debates about which system of medicine is 'better' than the other, many responsible doctors (whether they are allopathic or not) recognize that both have a role to play in the treatment program.

Natural medicine has often been frowned upon by conventional doctors, especially by those who do not have sufficient knowledge of these medicines. However, it is encouraging to note that some medical schools are now beginning to re-introduce it into their course work, thereby providing doctors with a wider range of treatment options from which to choose. In many countries, especially in Europe, India and China, natural and homeopathic medicines are commonly prescribed by conventional doctors and represent a significant part of the total annual drug sales.

Naturopathy is a branch of medicine (just as allopathy is a branch of medicine) which operates according to the underlying philosophy that the body has an innate capacity to heal itself. While natural medicines are often called ‘alternative’ or ‘complimentary’ medicines, they are, in fact, a unique and independent form of medicine in their own right, well able to treat a variety of conditions. Perhaps the term ‘holistic’ medicine is more apt, given the broad range of treatment options and approaches which are to be found within the practice of natural medicine. This encompasses many different disciplines, including herbalism, homeopathy, iridology, osteopathy, chiropractic, therapeutic massage techniques, aromatherapy, acupuncture and many, many more.

Most naturopaths will use a variety of treatment modalities in order to treat their patients in a holistic way to support health, relieve symptoms and prevent future disease. In fact, even the World Health Organization defines health as being "... more than simply the absence of illness. It is the active state of physical, emotional, mental and social well-being." This is a wonderfully clear description of holistic or natural medicine, which strives to support health (thereby relieving or preventing symptoms), rather than simply eliminating disease.

Although allopathic medicine certainly has a role to play and has made a tremendous contribution to medical science during the past century, there is a growing perception that it is not the only answer. In many cases, holistic medicine can accomplish just as much, if not more – without the risk of side effects, addiction and sacrifice to health so commonly associated with pharmaceutical drugs. Contrary to common perception, and provided that they are manufactured in the correct way, natural medicines can work quickly and safely to promote healing.

In many cases, they can succeed where pharmaceutical drugs have failed. Despite frequent reports that they are ‘unproven’ and ‘untested’, the opposite is true. Natural medicines have a long history of usage and there is a wealth of empirical evidence to support their effectiveness and safety. In addition, active clinical research is carried out by many academic hospitals and universities to support the extensive traditional and empirical evidence behind natural medicines.

It is also important to know that, like any medicine, herbal and homeopathic medicines must be manufactured in the correct way, following acceptable procedures and manufacturing methods to ensure maximum effectiveness and safety. Due to the recent rise in popularity of natural remedies, many companies have sprung up to take advantage of the market. Unfortunately, not all of them are equipped to manufacture to the correct standards, often resulting in a flood of inferior (and sometimes even unsafe) remedies onto the market – and giving natural remedies a bad name.

Even some pharmaceutical companies have rushed to claim their market share by producing so-called ‘standardized’ extracts of herbs and offering these as superior to the tried and tested methods of naturopathic manufacturing. Nothing could be further from the truth. While ‘standardized’ extracts may offer benefit of easy consistency of dosage (and cheaper more efficient production lines), they have grave disadvantages, including an increase in side effects, as the medicines produced in this manner lose the natural protective properties of the herbs. In some cases, these side effects have proved fatal – as was seen in the liver toxicity associated with standardized extracts of kava kava, a herb previously safely used for generations without any known side effects.

Most naturopaths recommend what is called the Full Spectrum Method of extraction – which retains the benefits of ALL the active ingredients within the herb as opposed to isolating only one – thereby providing a more complete treatment as well as superior protection against side effects.

Whatever your choice, always choose wisely. Research what is best for you. If you have a chronic or life-threatening condition, don't make changes without first discussing them with your doctor, in order that your condition may be monitored. Well-informed and supportive practitioners will support patients who want to take responsibility for their own health.
